Midsummer's Gold

The morning wakes in liquid gold,
A heavy breeze, a sun grown bold.
The meadows wave in emerald green,
The brightest coat they've ever seen.

The afternoon is slow and deep, Where shadows stretch and crickets cheep.

A sudden flash of lightning fly,
A spark against the twilight sky.

Then evening falls in velvet blue,
With heavy scent of grass and dew.

The longest days begin to fade,
In July's warm and quiet shade.
